State Representative Matt Gress Recognized as a “Legislator of the Year” by Pluribus News

STATE CAPITOL, PHOENIX – State Representative Matt Gress has received recognition as a Legislator of the Year from Pluribus News, a respected independent national news outlet that covers state-level policy and politics. After its first year in operation, Pluribus News has chosen to acknowledge the work of several legislators across the country and award state lawmakers who have significantly contributed to their state’s public policy.

“Throughout my first year in the Arizona House of Representatives, it has been my goal to advance sensible legislation, provide for our state’s citizens, and do what I can to help Arizona prosper,” said Representative Gress. “It’s an honor to have my efforts be recognized by a national entity in Pluribus News and its editor, Reid Wilson. I very much look forward to continuing this important work in the next session.”

In its article titled “Arizona’s Freshman Chairman,” Pluribus News comments:

When Arizona Rep. Matt Gress (R) arrived for his first legislative session this year, he didn’t need much of a freshman orientation. Gress, 34, had served as a staffer on the Joint Legislative Budget Committee and as former Gov. Doug Ducey’s (R) budget director.

While most freshmen spend their rookie sessions learning the ropes, Gress dove into the deep end. Speaker Ben Toma (R) named Gress chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Budgetary Funding Formulas, a rare honor for a newbie.
